FREDERICK P. ROSE HALL INFORMATION UPDATE: SEPTEMBER 18, 2008

Rose Theater Gets New Wood Floor - Adds Warmer Acoustics

Who/What:

Jazz at Lincoln Center's Rose Theater, located in Frederick P. Rose Hall, received a brand new wood floor composed of end grain mesquite, for opening night, to kick-off its 5th season of operation (Jazz at Lincoln Center celebrates its 22nd season of programming in the 2008-09 season).

It took over 50 people to complete the meticulous procedure, which was part of the initial floor plan.

Jazz at Lincoln Center worked with Sam Berkow, one of the acousticians involved in the original project, along with the Janson Design Group. Overseeing the project was Yorke Construction. Roger Berk company completed the wood installation.

Approximately 240 boxes of wood were delivered for this project.

When:

Project began August 18, 2008 and was finished September 17, 2008.

Where:

Rose Theater, Frederick P. Rose Hall, home of Jazz at Lincoln Center, on Broadway at 60th St., New York City.
