JAZZ FOR YOUNG PEOPLE® FAMILY CONCERT EXPLORES
“WHAT IS THE BIG BAND ERA?”
HOSTED BY TED NASH AND
THE JAZZ AT LINCOLN CENTER ORCHESTRA

Who/What:

Jazz at Lincoln Center’s popular family concert series presents its final concert of the 2010-11 season with Jazz for Young People: “What is the Big Band Era?” with host Ted Nash and the Jazz at Lincoln Center Orchestra. Even 75 years after the big band era, scholars and fans – not to mention dancers – agree that this was the period when jazz reached its peak, not only of popularity but of musical greatness. Joined by his father, trombonist Dick Nash (who began his career in the swing era), and a pair of swing dancers, Ted Nash will lead families through big band classics like Benny Goodman’s “Sing, Sing, Sing,” Count Basie’s “One O’Clock Jump,” Glenn Miller’s “In the Mood,” and Tommy Dorsey’s “I’m Getting Sentimental Over You.” Recommended for ages 6 and up.

Come early and join us in the Atrium for family-friendly pre-concert activities. Young musicians (ages 8 and up) are invited to bring their instruments for a workshop in the Nesuhi Ertegun Jazz Hall of Fame. Events are 12noon-2pm.
